Arizona: A Shopper's Mecca

Cozy crafts enclaves, glamorous mega-malls, historic trading posts, Western wear emporia ... whatever your acquisition itch, Arizona can scratch it.

Arizona's Top Shopping Spots

Greater Phoenix has perfected the art of the mall: indoor, outdoor, vast, intimate, upscale, bargain-oriented, you name it. But boutiques and specialty stores abound, too. The greatest upscale retail concentration is in downtown Scottsdale, which not only hosts the 1.8 million-square foot Scottsdale Fashion Square, with names like Nordstrom and Neiman Marcus, but is also home to several antiques and art gallery districts, among them Fifth Avenue, Marshall Way, and Main Street. Phoenix also offers high end retail experiences, with Saks and Gucci among the residents of Biltmore Fashion Park, and malls like downtown's friendly indoor/outdoor Arizona Center appeal to all purse sizes. Tempe, home to Arizona State University, caters to the collegiate crowd on Mill Avenue, and to bargain shoppers of all ages at Arizona Mills, where an IMAX theater and GameWorks play center share space with discounters like Saks Off Fifth Avenue. Those with a penchant for things past head for Glendale, with more than 90 antiques emporia.

Tucson's shopping wealth is spread eastside, westside, and all over town. Large, modern complexes like Foothills, Park, and Tucson malls are interspersed with such cozy shopping enclaves as St. Phillips Plaza, Plaza Palomino, and Broadway Village. La Encantada, the city's newest, most upscale mall, has several unique-to-Tucson stores as well as brands like Williams-Sonoma. Other interesting shopping pockets include downtown's Old Town Artisans, showcasing local, regional, and Latin American crafts; the 4th Avenue strip near the University of Arizona, with fun and funky wares; and the Lost Barrio, an old warehouse district with several ethnic- and Southwest-oriented home decor and furnishing stores.

About half an hour south of Tucson, the little town of Tubac, site of Arizona's oldest European settlement, has nearly 100 crafts shops and galleries, many run by artists. A further 20 minutes south and one easy walk across the border, Nogales, Mexico, is chock-a-block with shops purveying folk art, pottery, cowboy boots, and, of course, tequila.

Sedona boasts upscale shopping options north of the Valley of the Sun, with its hacienda-style Tlaquepaque complex, modeled after a Mexican shopping village, and abundant art galleries and boutiques. For funkier, hipper, and less expensive wares, there's nearby Jerome, a lively ghost town perched on a mountainside. Many Phoenicians drive a few hours north to Prescott, Arizona's first territorial capital, for reasonably-priced antiques. On the Navajo reservation, the Hubbell Trading Post in Ganado and Cameron Trading Post near the Grand Canyon offer the largest selection of rugs and crafts, but gift shops at such attractions as Navajo National Monument and, especially, Canyon de Chelly also sell a good array of Native American work.

What to Buy and Where to Buy It

Crafts from Mexico: High-quality imports can be found throughout the state, but especially in Tubac, Tucson (Old Town Artisans, the Lost Barrio), and Greater Phoenix (Purple Lizard Boutique for folk art). Naturally, there's plenty of the real deal in Nogales, Mexico. Among things to look for are Day of the Dead tableau (painted plaster or paper mache skeletons engaged in all sorts of cheerful activities), hand-blown glasses, Talavera pottery, and Mexican tinwork: painted ornaments, candlestick holders, and votive offerings called milagros (literally, "miracles").

Western gear and wear: The classic Western string tie, or bola, created by Vic Cedarstaff in Wickenburg in 1949 and declared Arizona's official state neckwear in 1971, comes in all patterns and prices, making it a great souvenir or gift. You'll find bolas at Western wear shops throughout the state, with a large group of them concentrated in Old Town Scottsdale. Galleries that sell Western art abound in Tucson, Tubac, Scottsdale, and Sedona. Other Western retail highlights: In Wickenburg, Double D for clothing and Ben's Saddlery for gear; in Tombstone, William Brown Holster Co. for tooled leather goods; in Nogales, Paul Bond for custom boots; and, on an old ranch near Benson, Singing Wind Bookshop for books about Arizona, nonfiction and tall tale.

Native American crafts: The gift shop at the Heard Museum in Phoenix has the state's best gathering of crafts of all types, created by artists from many of Arizona's native nations. You'll also find genuine katsinas, representations of spirits created as teaching tools for young girls, on the Hopi mesas; they're sold in small shops and directly out of artisans' homes. and Cameron trading posts and Garland's in Sedona all have large selections of Navajo rugs, and staffs that are knowledgeable about them. Contemporary silver jewelry made by the Navajo (often turquoise-embedded) and Hopi (many in overlay style) are sold in crafts shops all over Arizona, while pawn shops near the Navajo reservation – for example, in Flagstaff, Page, and Winslow – are good sources for antique Navajo belts and necklaces. Some finely coiled and decorated Tohono O'odham baskets are sold at Tucson's San Xavier Plaza, and the gift shop at Kitt Peak National Observatory, on Tohono O'odham land, has an impressive selection.

More Baubles...

Arizona strengths include golf, desert communities, and cacti – and you can take them with you, in a manner of speaking.

- In Celebration of Golf, with several Greater Phoenix stores (the main one in Scottsdale), hosts the largest golf-art gallery in the country, and a resident golf artist. Also sold: golf antiquities, golf equipment, and golf clothing, including some 800 pairs of golf shoes.
- Cosanti, in Paradise Valley, is the prototype for Arcosanti, architect Paolo Soleri's visionary (and unfinished) desert community north of Phoenix. To help finance the project, Cosanti sells beautiful ceramic and bronze wind bells, cast on the premises.
- Choose from a huge selection of prickly plants at B&B Cactus Farms near Saguaro National Park East in Tucson, then have your favorite spiny souvenir shipped home.
